Abstract The traditional Chinese literary view bestowed value mainly on those texts that pursued a didactic and moral purpose; however, several scholars in Chinese history composed works, recording and gathering anecdotes, to be enjoyed in leisure time. The jestbooks (Wenyan xiaohua ji), which had appeared in the literary landscape during the later Han/early Wei period (late 3rd century CE), became extremely popular during the Ming (1368-1644). This article provides a brief presentation of several collections through the ages, and then focuses on how they flourished during the Ming dynasty period.

Keywords Jestbook. Jests. Humorous anecdotes.

1 Introduction

Traditional Chinese jestbooks, in today’s histories of Chinese literature, written in Chinese, are normally defined as Wenyan xiaohua ji 文言笑話集;¹ this description illustrates a number of features of these texts: that they are collections (ji 集), which gather humorous anecdotes, or jests (xiaohua 笑話);² it also identifies the language in which the anecdotes were written, that is literary Chinese (wen yan 文言). These works belong to a ‘genre’ retrospectively defined, and, observing the material collected according to this definition, they are, generally speaking, collections of short anecdotes grouped together for entertainment purposes.³

As far as the history of this ‘genre’ is concerned, the jestbooks appeared in the literary landscape at the end of Han/early Wei Dynasties, and their first specimen can be found in the Xiaolin 笑林 (Forest of laughs), ascribed to the late Han dynasty scholar Handan Chun 邯鄲淳 (fl. 150-225).⁴

All the works now defined as jestbooks, in the Bibliographical chapters of the dynastic histories, were classified under the «xiaoshuo» 小説 category. This category grouped all the texts which were not easily classifiable: texts in prose, for the most part negatively defined as being as unreliable as street gossip. They were considered a kind of narrative prose which was not fit to be part of the official histories and, as a category, the «xiaoshuo» was placed at the margins of the «Zi» (Masters of Thought) section. The texts contained in this section had a marginal cultural status. However, as far as the collections of jestbooks are concerned, they did enjoy popularity among the literati through the ages.

2 A Brief Survey of the Jestbooks Contained in the Bibliographical Chapters of the Official Histories

Works that now are regarded as jestbooks (xiaohua ji) appeared for the first time in the Bibliographical chapter of the Suishu 隋書 (Book of Sui), under the «xiaoshuo» category (Suishu 34.1011). They were: Handan Chun’s Xiaolin, the Xiaoyuan 笑苑 (Garden of Laughs) by Wei Dan 魏澹 (580-645) and the Jieyi 解頤 (To Laugh) by Yang Jiesong 陽玠松 (Northern Qi). Among the three, only fragments of the Xiaolin remain, scattered throughout several later encyclopedias.

The Xiaoyuan and the Jieyi were already no longer listed in the bibliographical chapters of both the Jiu Tangshu 舊唐書 and the Xin Tangshu 新唐書 (The Old Book of Tang and the New Book of Tang; Jiu Tangshu 47.2036; Xin Tanshu 59.1539-1543), in which, however, the presence of possible jestbooks is still attested. The Qiyan lu 啓顔錄 (Record of Bright Smiles), ascribed to the early Sui official Hou Bai 侯白 (581-618), is listed in both chapters; a manuscript of this text (or part of it) was found in the caves of Dunhuang, and, dated 723, it is an interesting and understudied source with which to examine the literary landscape of the time. The Xin Tangshu chapter, in addition, records Liu Nayan’s 劉訥言 (fl. 666) Paixie ji 俳諧集 (Collection of Humorous Pieces) and He Ziran’s 何自然 (?-?, Tang dynasty) Xiaolin 笑林. Few texts, then, were ascribed to the Tang period (618-907), and nothing remains of their content. In contrast, during the Song period, the number of collections of humorous anecdotes increased.

The bibliographical chapter of the Songshi 宋史 (History of the Song), as far as Song dynasty works are concerned, presents the Qunju jieyi 羣居解頤 (Collection of Laughs Placed Together) by Gao Yi 高懌; the K'aiyan ji 開顔集 (Collection of Stories to Make You Smile), attributed to Zhou Wenqi 周文杞; the Xiaolin 笑林, by an undetermined scholar Lu 路氏; the Xiyu jishuo 戏語集説 (Collection of Jokes), by Nanyang Dezhang 南陽德張; the Huaji ji 滑稽集 (Collection of Humorous Pieces), by Qian Yi 錢易; and an anonymous Linxia xiaotan 林下笑談 (Humorous Conversations Under A Tree). Ning Jiayu (1996, pp. 212-214) is able to identify eight more collections ascribed to this period, which however did not appear in the bibliographical chap-

5 In his biography it is said that he was renowned for his witty nature and for this quality the Emperor Wen of Sui 隋文帝 (581-604) summoned him to court; cf. Suishu 58.1421.

6 He was one of the leading scholars in charge of writing commentaries for the Hou Hanshu 後漢書 (Book of Later Han). He was also the tutor of the prince Li Xian 李賢 (653-684) of the Tang. When the emperor Gaozong 高宗 (649-683) discovered that Liu had written such a humorous text (the Paixie ji), and, suspecting that he had used the book to instruct his son, he sent him into exile; cf. Jiu Tangshu 189A. 4956.

7 Not to be confused with Handan Chun’s Xiaolin. Analyzing the titles of the xiaohua ji through the ages, it appears that the title Xiaolin was frequently used.

8 Ning Jiayu (1996, p. 128), for the Five Dynasties period, identifies two more texts: a book titled Xiaolin 笑林 by Yang Minggao 揚名高, and another titled Qiyan lu 啓顏錄, ascribed to Pi Guangye 皮光業 (fl. 900), who was the chancellor of Qian Yuanguan 錢元瓘 (887-941), the second King of Wuyue 吳越.

9 Songshi 206.5219-31.

10 Few references about his biography can be found in the «Yinyi zhuan» 隱逸傳 (Biographies of recluses) in the Songshi (ch. 457).

11 There is no biographical information about this author; we only know from some bibliographical indexes that he served as jiaoshu lang 校書郎 (editor). An old edition of the text, in two juan, is preserved in Ding Bing’s 丁丙 (Qing) collection of rare editions (Shanben shushi cangshu 善本書室藏書). For more information about this text, see Huang Dongyang 黃東陽 2007. «Ci sui qing hui, yi gui yizheng-Songdai xiaoshu K'aiyan ji ‘ya su zhi bian’shiyi’» 辭 雖 傾 回, 意 歸 義正 - 宋人笑書 《開顔集》‘雅俗之辨’ 釋義 (Despite being a series of ludicrous words, the contents are correct and accurate: interpretation of ‘Distinguishing Elegance from Vulgarity’ in the Song dynasty humorous book K’aiyan ji). ter of the Songsli. They are, instead, recorded in the cunmu 存目 section (texts only listed but not preserved in the collection) of the «xiaoshuo» category in the Qing dynasty index Siku quanshu zongmu tiyao 四庫全書提要 (Catalogue [with critical abstracts] of the [imperially authorized] Complete library of the four branches), in private catalogues, or in the Shuofu 說浮 (Outskirts of texts), a Yuan dynasty (1271-1368) collectanea.13

3 Jestbooks in Ming Bibliographical Chapters and Tan Kai’s Woodblock Edition of the Taiping guanji 太平廣記 (The Extensive Records Assembled in the Taiping Era, 976-984)

In Ming times (1368-1644), jestbooks flourished. Despite their being removed from the bibliographical chapter of the Mingshi 明史 (History of Ming),14 fourteen texts are recorded in the «xiaoshuo» category of the private catalogue Qianqing tang shumu 千頃堂書目 (Vast Hall Bibliography), written by Huang Yuji 黃虞稷 (1626-1692), on which the Mingshi’s catalogue was based. Even though, since the invention of printing during the Song, it was probably possible to produce more books of this kind, the bibliographical chapters of official histories became more selective about the material they presented.15 The xiaohua ji were considered a marginal typology, so it is not surprising that they disappeared from the official catalogue.

For the Ming period, Ning Jiayu (1996, pp. 319-327) lists thirty five xiaohua ji,16 most of which can be dated to a period ranging from the last 13 As is the case for Lü Benzhong’s 呂本中 (1084-1145) Xuanqu lu 軒渠錄 (Records of laughing), Tian Hezi’s 天和子 Shanxue ji 善謔集 (Collection of good jokes) and Zhu Hui’s 朱暉 Juedao lu 絕倒錄 (Records to roar with laughter), according to the items left, they were all made of funny anecdotes regarding historical figures, like their contemporaries Su Shi 蘇軾 (1037-1101) and Sima Guang 司馬光 (1019-1086) for the Xuanqu lu and Juedao lu; or people from the past like Liu Ling 劉伶 (3rd century) for the Shanxue ji. For the complete list, cf. Ning 1996, pp. 212-213; for the few texts ascribed to the Yuan period cf. Ning 1996, p. 214.

14 The bibliographical chapter of the Mingshi 明史 (History of the Ming) lists only one text regarded as a xiaohua ji, the Zile bian 自樂編 (A text for self entertainment) by Li Yuheng 李豫亨, now lost; cf. Mingshi 98.2434.

15 On the more orthodox approach taken by the Histories, especially regarding the liezhuan 列傳 (biography), cf. Wilkinson 2013, p. 151.

16 Wang Liqi (1981, pp. 139-432) also records thirty-five texts. However, of the texts listed by Ning Jiayu, twelve have no fragments left, and so are not quoted by Wang Liqi, who, in turn, quotes twelve additional texts which in Ning Jiayu’s book have a different classification. For example, Wang Liqi classifies as a xiaohua ji the chapter that was made of humorous anecdotes of the Lushu 露書 (Book of Dew), its «xie pian» 諧篇, written by Yao Lü 姚旅 (7-1622); a book which Ning (1996, p. 285) actually classifies as a whole in the «miscellaneous category» (zazu lei 雜俎類).
part of the mid-Ming to the late-Ming (1436-1644). This was also the period that witnessed the beginning of the dominance of print culture over manuscripts, thanks to the «explosive growth» of the commercial printing industry (Lu 2010, p. 63). The increased number of jestbooks could well be considered an effect of this trend. There must be a connection between events, though, that might have helped this typology to flourish before it came into fashion.

Tan Kai 談愷 (1503-1568) (courtesy name, Shoujiao 守教) was a man from Xishan 錫山 (today Wuxi metropolitan area, near Suzhou). He took the jinshi degree in 1526 and, once retired from office, he decided to embark upon a huge cultural project: he edited and then published (1566) the Song encyclopedia Taiping guangji (Extensive records from the Taiping era, published in 978), which, as we know, collected stories and anecdotes of previously lost texts, up to Tang times. In Tan Kai’s time all circulating editions of the Taiping guangji were seriously damaged, so he decided to use his now abundant free time to create a woodblock edition (ke ben 刻本) of the Taiping guangji. He used a manuscript copy (chao ben 抄本), as his base text (diben 底本), against which he checked other editions. In the project he was not alone, as he enjoyed the help of three close friends: Qin Cishan 秦次山, Qiang Qicheng 強綺塍 and Tang Shidong 唐石東, who assisted him in compiling the book in its final form.

In the preface to his woodblock edition, Tan Kai wrote a presentation of the text which described its literary nature and the reason he decided to print it. He explained that the Taiping guangji: «was compiled by collecting material from unofficial histories (yeshi 野史), transmitted records (zhuanji 傳記) and lesser sayings (xiaoshuo 小説) of all the traditions» (Taiping guangji 1961, p. 2) and that the literati did not give much attention to a text of that kind. Differently, he said that the Taiping yulan 太平御覽 (Imperial Reading of the Taiping era), the other imperially commissioned Song encyclopaedia compiled in the same period (977-984), was «a collection of passages from officially categorized texts (jing shi zi ji 經史子...
This is the reason the Taiping yulan was widely known and the Taiping guangji was neglected. Tan Kai also explains that, as he had retired from official appointments and thus had a great amount of spare time, he decided to edit this text (the guangji), which assembled «the unofficial stories of the baiguan» (baiguan yeshi 稗官野史) not only because «it is possible to look at them (xiaodao keguan 小道可觀)», but also because «they are as pleasant to read as playing bo and yi games» (Taiping guangji 1961, p. 2).

It is evident here that Tan Kai is quoting the Hanshu 漢書 (Book of Han) definition of the «xiaoshuo» category (i.e. xiaoshuo are something that is possible to look at), which from its first appearance onwards, has been used as a definition for all non-official texts. The Hanshu states that the xiaoshuo were recorded because, even though superficial, they contained some worthwhile knowledge (Hanshu 30.1745); but Tan Kai specifies that this is not the only reason he was interested in this category of writings. These texts could also be as entertaining as playing games; this appears to be the main reason he undertook this task.

The Taiping guangji collects a large amount of anecdotes and stories, most of them belonging to the zhiguai 志怪 (records of the strange) and chuanqi 傳奇 (tales of the marvellous) typologies, as well as anecdotes from those xiaohua ji previously listed by the official catalogues. But it is not a mere collection; since it was supposed to be an encyclopaedia, it arranges the textual material according to several thematic categories. As the Tan Kai’s text was produced and introduced into the market, the Taiping guangji quickly gained the interest of the literati, so that during the Wanli period (1573-1619) it was already circulating widely. Its thematic structure had a strong influence on those literati who were already interested in the xiaoshuo (Niu 2008, p. 126); Hu Yinglin 胡應麟 (1551-1602), for example, the famous scholar who, devoting his studies to investigating the xiaoshuo as a genre, became fascinated by it, and he is said to have owned several copies of the text (Niu 2008, p. 111-112).

As far as the categories are concerned, Zhao Jingshen (1980, p. 28) notes that the Taiping guangji can be considered, in a way, a collection of xiaohua, as it has specific categories related to humor: the «hui xie» 詼諧 (humorous [anecdotes]) from juan 245 to juan 252; the «chao qiao» 嘲諷 (ridiculing) from juan 253 to juan 257, and the «chi bi» 嗤鄙 (sneering at) from juan 258.

21 For more information regarding the compilation of the Taiping yulan and the Taiping guangji, cf. Kurz 2001.

22 They are two «generic subdivisions» of wenyan xiaoshuo; cf. Chiang 2005, pp. 10-27.

23 He divided the xiaoshuo into six categories, among which zhiguai and chuanqi are included. According to Tak-hung Leo Chan (1998, p. 10) with Hu zhiguai and chuanqi «were introduced in the realm of critical discourse».
Ming literati might have paid great attention to the analysis of the encyclopedia’s content, and to its thematic subdivision. Hu Yinglin was probably influenced by the Taiping guangji in his categorizing of the sub-genres of ancient xiaoshuo (Niu 2008, p. 126), and later on, Feng Menglong, too, devoted great attention to the text, also using it as a repository from which he fished for stories. Additionally, not satisfied with the printed copies he was able to find in the market, he selected passages he liked and made the Taiping guangji chao (Selections from the Taiping guangji) (1626). Collecting more than two thousand, divided into eight juan, Feng Menglong’s text helped to disseminate the content of the Taiping guangji even more (Niu 2008, p. 75-76).

4 Ming Dynasty Jestbooks

Literary production, however, was not only the private enterprise of an author; after the Jiajing period (1521-1567) it was, more and more, promoted by the pressure of the publishers who needed more products to put on the market. As Tina Lu (2010, p. 69) speculates, also «the reevaluation of earlier canons characteristic of this period must have been partly a response to the pressure to produce new anthologies for the book market»; it helped, in fact, to identify and then reuse traditional literary themes and stories which were then reshaped and rearranged in new collections to meet a broad audience.

Tan Kai’s woodblock edition, as we already mentioned, also served the cause, providing a book, the Taiping guangji, which was a treasure trove of stories about ghosts, the supernatural, love, drama, gossips, and of humorous anecdotes. The appearance of an increasing number of jestbooks can rightly be considered part of the literary trend of this period.

Ming dynasty jestbooks were mostly derivative works, made up of stories collected from other sources. Even if they were written in lit-

24 Thirteen out of the twenty-nine surviving anecdotes of Handan Chun’s Xiaolin are contained in the Taiping guangji. Nine anecdotes among the thirteen are scattered inside these three categories.

25 In this period the link between publishers and authors, i.e. literary production and the market, was already very strong. The creation of collections of stories was often instigated by the publishers. Feng Menglong, too, created his Gu jin xiaoshuo (Stories old and new) under such a kind of pressure. See Wang 2003, p. 35.

26 Lu (2010, p. 68) explains that «more was written in these generations [the Wanli period] than in those preceding, but the explosion in publishing and book collection may be attributed more directly to repackaging and reorganization».

27 Rania Huntington (2003, pp. 8-9), describes how Ming-Qing fox-stories were largely based on the nine chapters about foxes of the Taiping guangji.
erary language (wenyan), they were not necessarily addressed to a limited audience; in fact, their simple classical Chinese, like that of the zhiguai, «with a limited vocabulary and regular sentence structure could, for someone with a rudimentary classical language education, be easier to read than the more verbose vernacular, with its wider range of vocabulary, sentence structure and colloquialisms» (Huntington 2003, p. 21).

Feng Menglong, apart from being one of the most prolific authors at that time, of works in vernacular language, had wide literary interests; he was also an enthusiastic compiler of collections of humorous anecdotes in literary language. In this respect, he composed three works: the Xiaofu 笑府 (Treasury of Laughs), the Guang xiaofu 廣笑府 (Expanded Treasury of Laughs) and the Gujin tangai 古今譚概 (Outline of conversations old and new). The Xiaofu is perhaps the most famous of the three. It was probably compiled around 1610-1616 and it collected seven hundred anecdotes from previous Ming sources. According to Zhou Zuoren 周作人 (1885-1967), the text «had the insight to restore jokes, long repudiated by Confucian scholarship, to their proper place as a valuable literary genre».

Whether or not he was moved also by the desire to make profit from this kind of book is still to be corroborated, to my knowledge, by the sources, but there is no reason to doubt it.

28 Wang Ping (2003, p. 35) lists four characteristics which define the typical reader of xiaoshuo during the Ming dynasty: he must be able to read this kind of text, he must afford to buy it, he must be interested in reading books and have the time to do it. According to Wang, the merchants at the time met all these requirements, and they were the leading readers of the xiaoshuo. For more insights about merchants and cultural circles see Brook 2002, in particular pp. 124-138. See also Hsu 2012, p. 255.

29 The Gujin tangai was later known as Gujin xiao 古今笑 (Laughs old and new) or Gujin xiao shi 古今笑史 (history of the laughs old and new). According to Li Yu 李漁 (1610-1680) the title was changed in Gujin xiao, to attract the attention of readers, i.e. for marketing purposes; cf. Chen 2002, p. 523. For more insights also cf. Zhao 1980, pp. 30-34.

30 The Xiaofu has a complicated textual history: lost in China, it was preserved in Japan, where it became very famous. For more information about Feng Menglong and, in particular, about this work, see Hsu 1998.

31 Quoted in Hung 1985, p. 28. Zhou Zuoren perhaps applied to Feng the literary aim which was actually his own. He was in fact one of the founders of the Chinese folk literature movement which tried to reevaluate several neglected literary typologies as folksongs, children’s literature, legends, jokes, etc. As far as jokes are concerned, Zhou Zuoren compiled two major works on this topic: the Kucha an xiaohua xuan 苦茶庵笑話選 (A selection of jokes from the bitter tea studio) 1933 and the Ming Qing xiaohua sizhong 明清笑話四种 (Four types of Ming Qing jokes) 1958; The first collects jokes from Feng Menglong’s Xiaofu, Chen Gaomo’s 陳皋謨 (fl. 1718) Xiaodao 笑倒 (Falling over with laughter), Shi Chengjin’s 石成金 (b. 1659) Xiao de hao 笑得好 (Have a good laugh). The Ming Qing xiaohua sizhong adds anecdotes from Zhao Nanxing’s 趙南星 (1550-1627) Xiaozan 笑讚 (Appraisals of laughter), in addition to several stories from the three collections previously mentioned; for more information, cf. Chen Wenxin 2002, p. 518-519.
Amongst the authors of the numerous collections composed in this period, there were also renowned scholars associated with the Gong’an school, such as Jiang Yingke 江盈科 (1555-1605), 32 who wrote three collections: the Tanyan 談言 (Talks and words), 33 the Xuetao xiaoshuo 雪濤小說 (Xuetao’s stories), and the Xuetao xieshi 雪濤諧史 (Humorous history of Xuetao). The first collects stories of the past, in which the protagonists were historical figures (like Northern Song Li Gou 李覯, or Tang dynasty Zhang Hu 張祜); the second reunites anecdotes with unnamed characters that represented a general type (as «a man of Chu», «a doctor», etc.); the last one, his most representative work (Zhu 2005, p. 304), collects stories Jiang saw and heard, and most of which are focused on the imperial examination system. Other collections composed by famous scholars are: Li Zhi’s 李贄 (1527-1602) Kaijuan yixiao 開卷一笑 (Reading with Laughs); 34 Yu Lüxing’s 郁履行 Xuelang 謔浪 (Unrestrained jokes); Xu Wei’s 徐渭 (1521-1593) Xieshi 諧史 (History of Humor); Liu Yuanqing’s 劉元卿 (1544-1609) Yingxie lu 應諧錄 (Account to attract humor); Zhao Nanxing’s 趙南星 (1550-1627) Xiaozan 笑贊 (Appraisals of laughs); and Zhong Xing’s 鍾惺 (1574-1624) Xiecong 諧叢 (Collection of humor).

According to Lydia Chiang (2005, p. 14) a collection «is not an accidental assembly of items. The objects of the collection reflect the taste, values, knowledge, resources, and power of the collector» – and of his own time, I would add. Similar to zhiguai and chuanqi collections, jestbooks are expressions of the knowledge and taste of a given author in a given time and they deserve their own attention in Chinese Literary History.

32 According to Tina Lu (2010, p. 100) he was drawing his sources also from the Taiping guangji.

33 Ning (1996, p. 324) classifies it as a paixie xiaoshuo even if after two lines he defines the text as composed of humorous jest and jokes (xiexue xiaohua 諧譏笑話); Chen (2002, pp. 517-518) and Wang (1981, pp. 231-237), however, define these works as xiaohua ji. Up to now, there is no shared coherence among the literary classifications produced by modern literary historians.

34 Li’s work is also known as Shanzhong yixi hua 山中一夕話 (One Night’s Talk in the Mountain); for more information cf. Lee 2012. Maybe because the attribution to Li Zhi is disputed, Ning Jiayu fails to record this book in his Zhongguo wenyan xiaoshuo congmu tiyao 中國文言小說總目提要 (A general index of Chinese xiaoshuo written in literary language) 1996. For more information, also regarding another text attributed to Li Zhi, the Sishu xiao 四書笑 (Jokes on the four books), see Huang Ching-sheng’s unpublished PhD thesis: Jokes on the Four Books: Cultural Criticism in Early Modern China 1998, in particular pp. 35-49.

35 Zhao Nanxing’s collection is probably one of the most peculiar among Ming dynasty collections. It gathers stories from various sources and oral tradition, as other books do, but at the end of every anecdote a comment is attached, an appraisal (zan) in which the voice of Zhao appears to express a judgment, so that the anecdote becomes a tool to express his own opinion about different topics; cf. Chen 2002, pp. 519-521 and Ning 1996, p. 321.
